

Gay McNeil

About Gay

Gay McNeil is an impressionist oil painter from Jordan Bay. Her paintings are not limited to one subject, but instead contain a variety of places and people. Instead of simply recreating what she sees, Gay's paintings focus on the essence of a person or place and how she feels in the moment, as well as the contrast and lighting of the view.

Gay's first encounter with impressionist art was at Yale, however, it wasn't until later, in Provincetown Mass., that she realized that's what she was meant to do. Since then she has worked alongside Cedric Egeli, a portrait artist from Maryland, and Peter Granucci, a painter from New Hampshire. Gay also has paintings that were used in the film Virginia's Run, backdrops used in theatre productions, and now owns a studio in Lockes Island, Jordan Bay. Yet, mastering impression color placement was her greatest achievement.

Her art is for sale at her studio in Jordan Bay.

Gay McNeil in her studio in Sandy Point

Photo by Cheryl Gaul

Virginia's Run
By Gay McNeil